STEPS

1. Buy the 22-and-20 pair for the ZN6 chassis - Fitment charts are unanimous here, so you can buy with confidence. The arms are standard J-hooks (the 9x3 size), and the owner's community consensus is that any J-hook blade in 22 and 20 inches fits.
2. Power down and lift the arms - Ignition off, fob in your pocket, wiper stalk off. Lift each arm gently away from the glass. If the car lives outside, check the rubber is not stuck to the glass before you swing the blade.
3. Release the driver's blade - Grip the driver's arm with one hand so it cannot snap back onto the glass. With your other hand, rotate the blade until it sits roughly perpendicular to the arm, then slide it down and off the J-hook.
4. Install the new 22-inch driver's blade - Feed the J-hook through the new blade's connector and slide it up until the latch clicks shut over the pivot pin. That click is your confirmation, so listen for it. Pull the blade firmly along the arm to prove it is locked.
5. Swap the 20-inch passenger blade - Do not swap the two lengths. Seat the connector, wait for the click, tug-test it, peel the sleeve, and lower the arm gently. Wipe the glass under both arms with glass cleaner while they are up.
6. Check blade lie and arm condition - With both blades installed, lower each arm and check the blade lies flat against the glass along its full length - a blade twisted in its connector will skip from the first wipe. Sight down each arm to confirm it is straight; the 86's ar...
7. Test with washers at all speeds - Turn the ignition on and run the washers, watching both blades sweep. If a blade chatters, lift the arm and re-seat the hook. These cars reward a proper install with a perfectly clean sweep across that big curved windshield.
